

fashion

LOOKBOOK: DOROTHY LEE

Party dresses that will get you through the holiday season - with enough money leftover for gifts.

Some people freak out during the holidays because they've spent too much money. Others freak out because they've spent too much time with family. But my annual angst is because of clothing—in particular, finding something that I can wear to my relatives' house that isn't covered in sequins, hot pink, or lace (which is basically everything I own).

Dorothy Lee's refined holiday collection hits the mark when it comes to looking presentable without looking like a personality-less clone. With her range of flapper-inspired dresses, silk shirts, and cashmere cardigans, she hits the three major marks: classic color palette, not-too-risque hemlines, and retro shapes that will send your grandma on an "I remember when Katherine Hepburn..." story.

And because almost everything is under $300, you can get a new outfit and still have enough money to gift your roommate the new Marni Stern album. After all, making your parents happy doesn't mean you can't also rock out.
REBECCA WILLA DAVIS

www.dorothy-lee.com

WANT MORE VINTAGE-INSPIRED OUTFITS? CHECK OUT:

Mine's Great Gatsby-inspired collection
Secrets of Charm's perfectly tailored pieces
Sue Stemp's party dresses

This story was published on November 18, 2008.

Share

